5 Ways to Protect Your Wallet During Wedding Season

It's summertime and love is in the air...but with wedding season in full swing, your wallet might not love the many expenses that come with being in or attending multiple celebrations. Fear not, there are ways to save money celebrating this season:

1. Set boundaries. It's an honor to be asked to participate in a wedding, but between pre-wedding parties, showers, bridal party outfits, etc., costs really add up...far more than just being a guest alone! If celebrating the couple in that capacity simply isn't in your budget, don't feel bad for saying so! The bride and groom care about you (or else they wouldn't have asked!) and as such will likely be understanding, accommodating, and appreciative of your honesty.
2. Get creative on attire. Let's face it, you likely don't want to be photographed wearing the same wedding outfit all summer long, but buying multiple looks is expensive. If you're shopping for a dress, consider renting through services like Rent the Runway, or if you're looking for a suit, invest in a high-quality one you can wear again with different shirts, ties, etc.
3. Set a budget. For each wedding, plan out exactly how much you want to spend on gifts, travel, outfits, etc. This way you have a "number" to reign you in if you find yourself starting to splurge.
4. Don't feel married to the registry, particularly if the items are out of your budget. Use the registry as inspiration to get a sense of what the couple likes, then find a gift that you find more affordable.
5. Book travel as early as possible. Start looking for flights, hotels, etc. as soon as you receive the Save the Date, as this gives you more time to take advantage of deals and sales. Remember to check invitations and/or wedding websites for any discounts, too!
